Conceptions of democracy [DE5]

Please indicate for the following statements how much you agree with them.

- It is important that governments always justify and explain their decisions to voters.
- It is important that social interests can continuously contest and influence political plans and decisions also between election dates.
- The government should develop its positions and politics in ongoing dialogue with political interests and affected groups.
- The quality of politics is measured by the extent to which the government subjects itself to continuing societal critique.
- Openness to the views of others and readiness to compromise are important in politics.
- It is important that elected politicians debate important questions among themselves before they take decisions.
- In politics, it is important to understand why other people have different opinions.
- The political will of a society can only emerge if different perspectives have a voice in ongoing public debates.
- The primary task of politics is to recognize the true will of the people and to translate it into decisions as directly as possible.
- The quality of political decisions is defined by how strong and how directly the true will of the people is expressed in them.
- Ideally, a democracy realizes the uniform will of the people in a society.
- In politics, it should be left solely to professional politicians to negotiate politically feasible decisions.
- Political matters should be left to elected politicians who are motivated by political success to take satisfactory decisions.
- Politics should be the preserve of professional politicians who negotiate the right policies for the country among themselves as well as with social interests.
- The quality of politics is measured by the extent to which it is informed by the knowledge of independent experts regarding the best political decisions.
- To serve the interests of society, political decisions should be based on facts and knowledge as much as possible.
- Ideally, political decisions reflect what experts, not what elected politicians deem the best for society.
- Although there is no true will of the people, a clear majority for a position in the population means that it is the correct decision.
- Politics should follow the current majoritarian mood in the society as closely as possible, regardless of which mood or opinion this is.
- Politics should primarily follow what people think and feel about political matters as directly as possible, rather than party lines or data and facts.
